

Is this program right for me?

Have you achieved some strides in your recovery from substance use while completing a residential, acute, or other intensive treatment program, but still feel like you need longer-term support?

Would a supportive, but less structured environment help you achieve long-term recovery? Could you benefit from residing in a community of supportive peers who are also in recovery? Would you benefit from having access to staff and resources to help you address challenges on your journey to recovery and independence? If so, are you willing to receive help?

Let the New Bedford Women's Graduate Program help you.

New Bedford Women's Graduate Program

A Supportive Independent Living Program

Serving Women with Substance Use Disorders in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts

What can I expect if I participate in the program?

The New Bedford Women's Graduate Program provides graduate housing and case management services. The program is located in a three-story structure providing three apartments that offer a comfortable, sober, home-like environment.

Residents are assisted with developing support systems and recovery skills which enable them to successfully transition into the community and experience long-term recovery and an improved quality of life.

Women in other treatment programs or in the community who have been sober and in recovery for at least three months may also apply to the Graduate Program. The length of stay is up to one year.

Moving to the New Bedford Women's Graduate Program after completing residential treatment has given me the chance to continue to build on my recovery. It is preparing me to live independently.
